Bavarian-British relations

Bavarian-British relations.

Bavaria and Great Britain have strong historical, cultural and economic ties. Even after leaving the European Union (EU) the UK remains an important partner for Bavaria, with whom we share common values and many mutual interests.

The United Kingdom is a key trading partner for Bavaria. But we see great potential also in other fields, such as science and innovation, education, youth exchange and culture, where cooperation can be deepened even further.

The Bavarian Office in London

The Office of the Free State of Bavaria in the United Kingdom is based in London.

The political course for the Office was set in April 2019 by the Bavarian Council of Ministers. After commencing operations in February 2022, the Office was officially opened by the former State Minister for European and International Affairs, Melanie Huml, on 25 May 2023.

Since institutionalised cooperation between the United Kingdom and the EU has ceased as a result of Brexit, bilateral cooperation is being intensified by greater commitment also on the part of the Bavarian State Government.

Under the leadership of Bavaria's State Chancellery, the Office has the mission to promote cooperation between Bavarian and British players in a wide range of fields of activity, thereby expanding and further deepening the close relations with the United Kingdom.

One of the central tasks of the Office is to promote economic exchange after Brexit.

Another important aspect is cultivating Bavarian-British relations in culture, education and youth exchange as well as in science and innovation.
